One may be able to transfer all or part of any unused benefits to a spouse or dependent children, as long as the combined total does not exceed 36 months of GI Bill® benefits. Generally, to transfer benefits, a person must make a new four-year commitment to military service and the designee will repay any benefits used under the Post 9/11GI Bill® if one does not complete the four-year commitment to military service. As long as a new four-year commitment is made, benefits can be transferred to a spouse after six years of service or entitlement can be transferred to your children after one serves six years; however, one must complete 10 years of service before a child can use benefits. Step-children are also eligible. Your spouse may retain benefits if one gets divorced. If children marry, they may keep the benefit as long as they were eligible for the benefit before marriage, but benefits expire on their 26th birthday. Only those currently serving in the Uniformed Services can transfer benefits to eligible family members. Once separated or retired from service, the benefit will no longer be eligible for transfer. The children and un-remarried spouses of Service members who died in the line of duty post September 10, 2001 are eligible under the Fry Scholarship.
